Through SkillsUSA I have grown in my self-motivation and clarified my future goals. During my freshman year, I was afforded the experience to redesign my school's website with a partner. Our advisor was hands off for this project, so the success of the project relied solely on our shoulders. Through the process of setting goals and working hard, we began to understand just how valuable self-motivation is when you want to reach success.

Career and technical education programs provide options to thousands of students to pursue career pathways that utilize their skills and talents. CTE will help develop America's future workforce.

When I graduate high school, I want to go to college to become an engineer. I want to go into a research field where I can develop new products to shape America's industry and to help others. I have found a love for supporting others any way that I can, and I believe that I could produce many great things to make people's lives easier.
